

Kids with Character

While living The Golden Rule is ideal, most of us forget about it from time to time as forge our way through each day. But for 13-year-old Molly McGuire, treating others as she would like to be treated is a part of who she is, and she makes it a point to lead with kindness.

“She’s not really a vocal leader, but she models integrity with her daily actions,” said Troy Brunner, Molly’s math teacher at Midview Middle School.

“I admire the fact that she is a very proud and confident person at such a young and difficult age. Molly is very empathetic toward other people and their feelings.”

The seventh-grader, who lives with her parents, John and Pamela McGuire, leaves a lasting, positive impression on those she meets. “I would be very proud if my daughters grew up to be just like Molly,” Brunner said.
